

POLITICAL BODY LABELS

It's been really nice the first conversation the collective had around these subject. The sharing thoughts about how big cities and social media push our bodies to be labeled as a citizen and also as an artist: mother, anti-capitalist, feminist, go vegan, wok, artist, dance-maker and many others... are words easy to find in the description or presentation profiles in media. It's become quite overwhelming the way we label ourselves in a few words in order to be practical. Also as an artist who want to sell their work, you need to label it to tell the market what makes your work different... or just labeled. Even our dress code define us in our day to day.

As a collective developing our work in rural environment, we discuss the less need you have in small village to label yourself because everybody knows who you are and what you do which can be suffocating in certain ages but, in grow ones, and, as an elected choice, it starts a dialogue between generations and different ways of living.
